THE EVENING NEWS.

JOHN H. HOLLADAY, PROPRIETOR.

FRIDAY, MARCH 8, 1872.

THE EVENING NEWS IS PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK-DAY AFTERNOON, AT FOUR O'CLOCK, AT THE OFFICE, SOUTH-EAST CORNER OF MERIDIAN AND CIRCLE STREETS.

PRICE:—Two CENTS.

SUBSCRIPTIONS:—Subscribers served by carriers in any part of the city at ten cents per week. Subscribers served by mail, one copy one month, $1.00; three months, $2.50; one copy for three months, $1.25; one copy for one year, $10.00.

THE WEEKLY NEWS.

Is a handsome eight column folio, published every Wednesday. Price, $1.00 per year. Specimen copies sent free on application.

NO ADVERTISEMENTS INSERTED AS EDITORIAL MATTER.

THE House Committee on Commerce has decided to appropriate $50,000 for the improvement of the Michigan City harbor, but our delegation in Congress insists that the amount be raised to $100,000. There is some prospect that it will be done.

THE contest over the admission of Utah as a State promises to be a warm one. A strong Congressional lobby has been formed to put the measure through, and the Mormons are in favor of it. The Gentiles, however, whose influence is not great enough to control the Territory, oppose it.

THE Poet Laureate of England is required by law, that is by custom, to produce an appropriate ode or other poetical production upon every occasion of special family interest in the royal house. In accordance with this silly old prescription, Mr. Tennyson is announced as being in labor with some fitting expression of national joy at the recovery of the Prince of Wales. If exacting such a work of him is not putting Pegasus to pulling a dirt cart that incongruous task has never been attempted.

MR. GREELY is a member of the National Republican Committee. He refused to attend the meeting at which the time and place for holding the National Convention was appointed, and wrote a letter giving his reasons. Some inquiry being made why he did not sign the call, he authorizes Mr. Chandler, to whom the letter was written, to publish it, but Mr. Chandler declined, pleading a trivial excuse. Mr. Greeley, in to-day's Tribune, publishes the letter, which we copy in full:

"FRIEND CHANDLER: Please do not attach my name to the call for a National Convention. I stayed away from your meeting on purpose to keep my position of independence. If we have trustworthy assurances of reform from the White House, all right; but I am not inclined to help our Leets and Stockings to another half million of plunder. Yours, HON. W. E. CHANDLER."

THE aggregate valuation of Indiana in the census is $1,268,180,451, almost exactly double the valuation on the tax duplicates. We are worth nearly $1,500,000,000, and we pay taxes on $662,000,000. This revelation of the enormous accession of wealth between the 1st of January when appraisements are returned, and the 1st of June when the census is taken, is calculated to puzzle one considerably. And the difference makes heavily for the rich man. The poor man's little house and lot are easily set at about their fair value, but the "north end" palace, with plate glass and iron railings, frescoes and costly shrubbery, never gets within thousands of dollars of its value. The palace escapes with an assessment of $5,000 to $10,000, which in this city is $100 to $200, and its escape makes the little house pay more than its due share. The immense discrepancy between the census and the duplicate is, in effect, an admission that the property of wealthy men is studiously undervalued where it is to be taxed, and fully rated only when it is to be loaded with no burden. Pennsylvania made a far more infamous exhibition in this way in 1860 than our State does now. Massachusetts came pretty nearly equalizing the census with the duplicate, but lacked some millions. If the Democratic majority of the last Legislature had been worth its weight in sand, this shameful exposure would never occur again. The returns to the census and to the Assessor would tally a little better.

Why Senators Oppose Civil Service Reform.

An effort was made in the Senate yesterday to appeal all the legislation in reference to civil service reform. Mr. Carpenter being the prime mover, seconded by Mr. Logan. The chief supporters of the movement were the carpet-bag Senators, assisted by such men of eminent purity and profound statesmanship as Cameron, Chandler, Pomeroy and Caldwell of Kansas. The effort failed, as it deserved to. Mr. Edmunds, of Vermont, breezed out in a little speech which fully explains the motives of Senators in denouncing civil service reform, and attempting to retard it in every possible way, and to which we give a place in our columns. The report says:

Mr. Edmunds thought it very remarkable that the wisdom of the country supposed to be concentrated in Congress, having last year deliberately passed a law authorizing the President to make this experiment in civil service reform, should threaten to abandon the effort and repeal the law just as soon as an attempt was made to put it into practical operation. He fully agreed with those who denounced this civil service reform as a humbug and an encroachment on the rights of the people, for his own rights had been unwarrantably infringed. In the good old times when he went to a department and asked to have Smith or Jones appointed to an office because he was a friend of his, or because he had worked hard to make him Senator, or for some other equally good reason, the matter was generally arranged satisfactorily without any impertinent questions as to the fitness of the applicant for the place; but now when he approached the head of a department on the same errand, he was told that his recommendation was no longer sufficient to secure the appointment—that the President had taken the matter out of the hands of members of Congress, and that applicants were now required to undergo an examination as a test of their fitness for the places they sought, as if there could be any better proof of a man's fitness for any office than that he had helped to elect a Senator.

[Laughter.] In this way he (Edmunds) was stripped of the factitious importance he formerly enjoyed, brought down to a common level, and compelled to stand on his own merits alone. Of course he felt this to be a gross outrage. [Laughter.] He spoke only for himself. He was only stating his own grievances, but he knew that his fellow Senators would sympathize with him. [Laughter.] It was a painful fact, however, that in this country there were a great many persons who were neither candidates for office nor followers of candidates, people who did not appreciate the merits and claims of managers of primaries and other political bodies, and who thought that Postmasters ought to know how to write and the accountants ought to understand arithmetic. No one could see more clearly than he did the folly of all this, but as these unreasonable people were unfortunately in a great majority, and it was their business that the officers of the government were paid to do, and their money that was to be collected and spent, he feared they would have their way. [Laughter.]

Congressional Contests.

A contested seat in Congress, or in any other body divided into well defined parties, is usually nothing more than the problem of ascertaining how little support of fact the stronger party feels able to do with. Sometimes, in glaring cases or with contestants of unequal personal attractiveness, the dominant party may be led to do justice, but these are exceptional, and of no force as precedents. Generally the majority's man wins. A sense of this tendency to find justice on "our side" probably had something to do with the practice, so prolific of contests, of treating an unsuccessful contestant as an unfortunate creature to whom the nation should make some compensation for the loss of his office. He was paid just the same wages and expenses as the other, as a sort of apology for conscious injustice, and the practice once established extended to all cases alike. A man with no more just pretension to a seat in Congress than a seat in Valhalla, would get a hearing, and the resolution embodying the decision would order that he be paid full per diem and expenses during his detention by the contest. Of course this made it fun for him. He could well afford to stay in Washington on such terms, and the longer the investigation took the better he liked it. In effect the nation, by this mischievous liberality, was made to pay a tremendous premium upon "cooked" contests; to hire men to waste the time of Congress with questions of no moment to anybody, and the natural result followed in a clangor of idle claims with every new Congress. The parties were rarely, we believe never, men of any brains, character or value. They wanted the seat, to be sure, but they were more than boundedly paid if they didn't get it. The customary "per diem and expenses" gave them such wages as they had never known before in their lives, such wages as they could never hope to make by any possible success at home, and to fail was thus enchanting success. Men came to Washington solely to make a contest, and very likely in the first place became candidates for not long else. A more senseless, mischievous practice it would be hard to devise. The country will rejoice to see it broken up. The present Committee on Elections has decided to allow no compensation to contestants. The successful man gets his seat and salary, the other goes home at his own cost. The first result of this wholesome change will be that we shall not see one contest hereafter where heretofore we saw a half dozen, and they invariably brought by feeble, idle, worthless men. A contest now will mean something more than an effort of a "dead beat" to "make a raise."

A Pious Prophet.

The Virginia, Nevada, Enterprise, of February 25, says: The Pious are again in about as strong force in and around the city as they were before their late tumultuous exodus in obedience to the warning voice of their prophet. The more intelligent of the tribe are inclined to believe their big prophet a big humbug. He has appointed the general resurrection for next spring, when the grass shall have attained the height of a "pony's hoof." At this time, he says, all the mountains will be leveled, and all the people of the past and present will dwell together on the great plain thus formed. Some Indians with whom we were conversing a day or two since in regard to the new doctrine, were anxious to know whether at any time the dead of the whites had ever risen from the ground. On the whole, they were not evidently displeased with the idea of a general resurrection. One of them said, "It would be fine to have all our fathers and mothers and brothers and sisters that are dead come up and live with us forever." Although the Indians are somewhat inclined to laugh at their prophet's predicted great flood when in the presence of white men, yet it is easy to see that his teachings have impressed them not a little. The Indians here say that the prophet gathers the people about him nightly and preaches to them—sometimes nearly all night.

A Candidate Who Smells of Old Cheese.

The New York Herald which is now engaged in singing Governor's praises says Judge Davis represents nothing. His name is associated with no thought or achievement in our history. Judges of the Supreme Court are not the liveliest candidates. They become mouldy and stiff, and have the old cheese flavor, and do exultantly in their comfortable, inert, respectable gentleness from his moss-clad seat on the bench is cruel, and we would as soon expect our sporting people to bring old Hambletonian from his pasture and match him against Goldsmith Maid. Judge Davis would have to be carried through a canvass.

Real Tragedy in an Opera House.

A tragical occurrence took place recently at the Oporto Opera House, in Portugal, not down on the bills. An actress undressed so indecently in the night scene in "Fra Diavolo," that the ladies in the box, who were in the theater in a paroxysm of indignation, and returning with a pistol, deliberately shot her dead when she next made her appearance on the stage.

A MOTHER'S WORK.

[From the New England Farmer.]

"She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness."—Prov. xxxi: 27.

Early in the morning, Up as soon as light, Overseeing breakfast, Putting all things right; Dressing little children, Hearing lessons said, Washing baby faces, Toasting husband's bread.

After breakfast reading, Holding one at prayers; Putting up the chamber work, Mending little tears; Good-bye kissing children, Sending off to school, With a prayer and blessing, Mother's heart is full.

Washing up the dishes, Sweeping carpets clean, Doing up the chamber work, Sewing on machine; Baby lays a crying-crying— Mother leaves her sewing To sing the lullabies.

Cutting little garments, Trimming children's hats, Writing for the papers, With callers having chats; Hearing little footstep Running through the hall, With school-bag over her shoulder, As mamma's name they call.

Talking with the children All about their school, Soothing little troubles, Teaching grammar rules; Seeing about supper, Lighting up the rooms, Making home look cheerful, Expecting husband soon.

Then, with all her headaches, Keeping to herself, Always looking cheerful, Other lives to bless; Putting to bed children— Hearing say their prayers, Giving all a good night's kiss, Before she goes down stairs.

Once more in the parlor, Sitting down to rest, Reading in the Bible, How His promises are blessed; Taking all her sorrows And every care to One, With that trusting, hopeful heart, Which none but mothers own.

LEPROSY.

A Hundred Years of Plague in a Seaside Town.

[St. Johns, New Brunswick, Letter to the New York Sun.]

Will Americans believe that leprosy, "the eldest daughter of Death," exists on this continent? Though I had seen something to that effect in the Appleton's Cyclopaedia, I for one did not believe it before I heard of Tracadie.

Tracadie is a small village on the marshy fringe of Gloucester county, New Brunswick, about twenty-five miles south of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Landward, the eye rests on a dreary, monotonous level, dotted here and there by wretched fishermen's hovels. Seaward, the low line of a harbor is broken by the jagged, and silent broods over the gloomy spread of waters. Tracadie is of French origin, having been settled by Basque colonists soon after the peace of Utrecht, early in the eighteenth century. It was poor and miserable enough from the first, but God's chosen curse fell upon it toward 1790, when a vessel from the Levant was wrecked on its shores, and bales of old clothes, teeming with plague germs, were washed upon the sand. A terrible pestilence broke out and decimated three of the surrounding villages, and what was worse, its seeds remained. From that day to this Tracadie has never been purged of the malady.

THE HORRIBLE MALADY DESCRIBED. There seems to be no reason to doubt that this singular disease is the ancient leprosy, or the elephanthiasis Græcorum. I will note some of the strange symptoms of this Tracadie distemper. Three stages are distinguished. In the first, the skin takes on a morbid dead whiteness. In the second, it becomes slightly yellow. In the third, it turns to a deep red, violet, and sometimes even to a greenish tinge. Let us follow a case through these different stages. The patient begins by experiencing a burning fever and racking ache, a stiffness and weakness in the joints, a heaviness in the chest, rushing of blood to the head, and many other sensations of languor. The most remarkable symptom, however, is an

UTTER INSENSIBILITY TO PAIN.

The leper can bear the pricking of a sharp instrument, such as a needle, or knife blade, into any part of the body without feeling hurt. Instances are given of lepers burning hands and feet without knowing it. In one case it was not till the smell of charred flesh had attracted the attention of a third person that one of these unfortunates was rescued from a life which he had found more endurable than death. The blood in the veins is replaced by yellowish spots, generally the size of a dollar piece. These spots are at first separated from each other, but little by little they extend their circles, until touching together, they cover the whole body with a mantle of rotteness.

A LIVING DEATH.

Then follows a swelling of the limbs and the bloating of the body from head to foot, until finally the skin, being too much distended, bursts, and ulcers of the most disgusting sort break out. The skin takes a shiny look, as if it were varnished. The flesh between the thumb and forefinger shrivels. The extremities of the hands and feet grow very small, and finally the fingers drop from their articulations without pain to the sick man. The face is generally very much swollen. The ears, chin and cheeks are covered with tubercles, hard and red, the size of a large pea. The eyes, half drawn from their sockets, are afflicted with a kind of cataract which sometimes results in total blindness. In this last stage the color of the skin is usually reddish or purplish. The end, of course, is with the internal organs. The bronchial tubes become obstructed and gorged with tubercle, so that breathing finally becomes a mere whistle, and the patient is every moment threatened with suffocation.

THE DEATH STRUGGLE IS AT HAND.

beyond that of any other known disease. A devoted priest, who has attended some of these cases, declares that they surpass in horror anything he has ever witnessed, and ready as he is to fly to the relief of any form of human misery, he prays God never to behold again the death of a leper.

One of my first questions naturally was: Is the disease contagious? And the answer, to my great relief, was negative. Under the same roof the husband may have it, and the wife not, or vice versa. One man had three wives. The first two died of leprosy, and the third was tainted by it, while he remained perfectly sound. In one family two or three children are leprosy; the rest clear, survivors of the hospital, washerwomen and others have not suffered from the malady.

A HUNDRED YEARS OF PLAGUE.

Tracadie being on the seaboard, and its inhabitants being fishermen, several of these, bearing the seeds of the malady, have escaped to Halifax, Boston, and other places, but we have never heard that they communicated the infection anywhere. Indeed, the circumscription of the plague for a hundred years to the narrow geographical limits of Tracadie, is perhaps the most curious feature of this wonderful disease, and one quite apt to give rise to the superstitious suspicion of curse from heaven. Neither, however, is it all hereditary. Leprous parents produce hale children. The wife of a certain Robichaud was covered with ulcers from sole to crown. She became the mother of a daughter who she nursed at her own breast. Yet the girl grew up thoroughly clean, married, and her children also clear.

Owing to the sparsely settled character of the province of New Brunswick, it was not until 1844 that the attention of the authorities was drawn to Tracadie. At that date a medical commission was appointed to investigate the disease and report minutely upon it. Subsequently, the provincial government ordered the establishment of a in the neighboring island of Sheldrake, in the Miramichi river. In 1847, however, this hospital was removed to the mainland, about half a mile from the parish church of Tracadie, in a vast inclosure set apart by the government. The buildings are of wood, all communicating with each other. The hospital itself is a separate building, containing two large halls appropriated to males; two other halls above are devoted to females.

The Hon. Hamilton Gordon, late Governor of New Brunswick, in a work entitled "Wilderness Journeys," was attracted by the terrible problem of Tracadie, and ventured his opinion on the origin of the scourge. He attributes it to the of the inhabitants, who, in reality, feed almost wholly on herring, potatoes and turnips, their poverty being such that they eat perhaps not ten families which eat bread. This theory, however, can not hold, for there are villages all along the coast of New Brunswick, even in close proximity to Tracadie, which, though they are equally poor and underfed, have never experienced the attacks of the insidious malady.

A celebrated French physician, named La Billois, living at Dalhousie, reported, after sixteen months of treatment, that he had cured ten cases by acting as for syphilitic disease, but unfortunately all these patients but one took to their beds again and died soon afterward.

The Hotel Dieu nurses, with their usual intelligence and patience, are making a series of experiments, intending to ascertain, if possible, the origin and real nature of the disease. Until now they have made only partial discoveries, and the chances do not seem favorable to a satisfactory solution of the problem.

BLOOD FOR BLOOD.

The Murder of an Outlaw's Father—He Bitterly Averages the Deed.

[North Carolina Letter to N. Y. Herald.]

When Sherman's army had passed on to Fayetteville and Raleigh, the malignant rage of the people of Robeson county turned upon this old citizen and the helpless part of his family. They little knew what a young demon they were to arouse for seven ensuing years in the wild boy who resided in the swamp, and whose motto was to be inflexible "Blood for blood!"

They resolved that the Lowrys were then committed adherents of the Yankees, that the blood of Barnes and Harris was unaccounted for, and that it was necessary to make an example of somebody in Scullville town to teach them that the colored man was not yet the colored man's triumphant. Blind, inconsiderate, brutal ill-will and cruelty were at the bottom of this movement. It started between Floral College and what is now called Shoe Heel. A member of the gang was a Presbyterian preacher, named Coble, or Cobill, an old apostle, exhorter and Pharisee of slavery, and one of the leaders in it was Murdoch MacLain, who, six years afterward, tumbled out his buggy, shot through and through by Henry Berry Lowery.

These, among twenty others, march upon old Allen Lowery's cabin, and dragged out the old man and his wife, and two of the sons, found on the premises, Sinclair and Bill. Searching the cabin, they found several articles said to have been fled from the white neighbors. This was justification enough.

They carried the old people off to a safe nook and there went through the farce of examining them. The devil's own priest—Coble or Cobill—got a prayer ready to make at the execution, and to make his holy role positively consistent, he pleaded for the life of Sinclair Lowery. The negroes said these white Ku Klux made the condemned people of the family dig their own graves.

They stood the old man, at sixty-five years of age, up beside his son, both of them enduring the ordeal with Indian stoicism, and by the light of blazing torches, as one accords the other, snout them to death with duck shot and ball. Coble or Cobill got off his prayer and perhaps his gun. Before they shot the father and son they endeavored, with blanching fear of the vengeance of the North, to make the poor old wife of Allen Lowery confess to some justification for their act by pointing their pieces at her, and firing volleys over her head until she was nearly paralyzed with fear.

From a thicket near at hand Henry Berry, the son of Allen Lowery, saw the volley fired which laid his father and father bleeding on the ground. There he swore eternal vengeance against the perpetrators of the act. Fourteen citizens have paid part of that penalty in the succeeding seven years. He has been the greatest scourge the South ever knew from one of the inferior race, and he developed a cunning, bloodthirsty, activity and courage unmatched in the history of his race.

BOSTON'S STEWART.

The History of a Merchant Prince.

[Boston Letter to Chicago Journal.]

Twenty-five years ago the senior partner of the eminent dry goods house of Jordan, Marsh & Co. was a clerk in an unpretentious shop on Hanover street. He was described as an awkward lad, and those who were acquainted with him thought he couldn't amount to much. After awhile the young man, with several friends, went into business on his own account, and opened a store at the north part of the city. His business talent developed itself; he purchased close and sold large. Gradually enlarging his business, he purchased heavily all kinds of leather goods, and, as good luck would have it, a combination of circumstances in the market sent his prices up, and he sold at a large advance. His friends thought he had acted somewhat recklessly in purchasing so heavily, but fortune was on his side. The firm from and after this period of its existence became a very popular one, and a large store was opened on Washington street, since which time the establishment has grown to enormous proportions until now it has become the Stewart's of Boston, both as to the wholesale and retail trade. The house sells between ten and twenty millions a year, and among other things makes a specialty of American silks and other productions native to the country. One of the secrets of the success of this dry goods prince is the liberal manner in which he has used printers' ink.

Eyebating the Liquor Law.

The ingenuity of the New England rum-seller who, in the early days of prohibition, conducted an illicit traffic in ardent spirits under the pretence of exhibiting a striped pig, has been equalled, if not surpassed, by the proprietor of a grog-shop in Northampton, Massachusetts, who uses a smallpox flag to protect his business from the unwelcome visitations of the State constables.
